JOINT STATEMENT ON PREVENTING AND RESOLVING ETHICAL CONFLICTS INVOLVING HEALTH CARE PROVIDERS AND PERSONS RECEIVING CARE

This joint statement was developed and approved by the Board of Directors of the Canadian Medical Association and the Council of the Canadian Nurses Association in 1998.

Purpose
The purpose of this joint statement is to provide a framework for the prevention and resolution of ethical conflicts involving health care providers and persons receiving care. It is intended to guide the development of policies and procedures that address these conflicts in a fair and equitable manner. The statement is based on the following principles:
1. The primary concern is the best interests of the patient.
2. Health care providers and persons receiving care have a mutual responsibility to resolve ethical conflicts.
3. The resolution of ethical conflicts should be based on a fair and equitable process.
4. The resolution of ethical conflicts should be based on the principles of transparency, accountability, and respect for the dignity of all parties involved.
5. The resolution of ethical conflicts should be based on the principles of justice and equity.
6. The resolution of ethical conflicts should be based on the principles of confidentiality and privacy.
7. The resolution of ethical conflicts should be based on the principles of non-discrimination and equality.
8. The resolution of ethical conflicts should be based on the principles of integrity and honesty.
9. The resolution of ethical conflicts should be based on the principles of respect for the autonomy of all parties involved.
10. The resolution of ethical conflicts should be based on the principles of respect for the rights of all parties involved.
11. The resolution of ethical conflicts should be based on the principles of respect for the values and beliefs of all parties involved.
12. The resolution of ethical conflicts should be based on the principles of respect for the culture and traditions of all parties involved.
13. The resolution of ethical conflicts should be based on the principles of respect for the diversity of all parties involved.
14. The resolution of ethical conflicts should be based on the principles of respect for the individuality of all parties involved.
15. The resolution of ethical conflicts should be based on the principles of respect for the humanity of all parties involved.
