Conflicts of interest

Physicians should avoid situations in which there is a conflict, or potential conflict, of interest that may be perceived to change the objectivity of the physician's assessment. Conflicts of interest may arise in a variety of contexts, including:

1. Professional relationships: where the physician's medical practice or employment relationship may influence the treatment or care of patients.
2. Financial relationships: where the physician has a financial interest in a particular service or product.
3. Professional associations: where the physician holds a position of influence in a professional association.
4. Other relationships: where the physician has a personal or professional relationship that could influence the physician's assessment.

The CMA recommends that physicians disclose any conflict of interest to their patients and, when appropriate, consult with other physicians or organizations to determine whether the conflict of interest should be managed or avoided.

The CMA supports the American Medical Association's guidelines for the management of conflicts of interest in medicine.
