CMA CODE OF ETHICS AND PROFESSIONALISM

The Code of Ethics and Professionalism articulates the ethical and professional standards of conduct and responsibilities of the medical profession. The Code provides guidance to members of the medical profession on how to act in the best interests of patients, the profession and society in general. It is intended to be a useful tool for physicians in their practice and to assist members of the public in understanding the ethical responsibilities of physicians.

In the Code, ethical practice is defined as a practice that is consistent with the principles of the profession, and that is consistent with the principles of the health professions. Ethical practice is characterized by a commitment to the principles of the Code, a commitment to the principles of the health professions, and a commitment to the principles of the Code.

The Code of Ethics and Professionalism is a statement of principles that guides the practice of medicine. Its principles are intended to guide and promote the practice of medicine in a way that is consistent with the principles of the health professions.

CMA Statement on Racism

This is a statement of the Canadian Medical Association (CMA) on the impact of racism on the health of members of racialized communities.

The CMA is committed to addressing racism in health care and promoting health equity for all Canadians. This commitment is grounded in the principle that all individuals, regardless of race, should have equal access to high-quality health care.

Racism has a profound impact on health outcomes, including higher rates of chronic diseases, mental health issues, and lower life expectancy. It is a systemic issue that affects all levels of society, from individual experiences to institutional practices.

The CMA believes that addressing racism requires a comprehensive approach that includes changes in policy, practice, and culture. This includes advocating for policies that reduce health disparities, promoting health equity, and ensuring that health care providers are trained to recognize and address racism in their work.

To this end, the CMA has developed a number of initiatives, including training programs for health care providers, research on the impact of racism on health outcomes, and advocacy for policy changes that address health inequities.

We encourage all Canadians to join us in this important work and to take action to address racism in all its forms.

Sincerely,

The Canadian Medical Association

EQUITY AND DIVERSITY IN MEDICINE

A POLICY

The members of the policy are to promote understanding of the differences in health and in the health care system that are systematically related to the race, gender, socioeconomic status, sexual orientation, and other key characteristics of Canada's population. The policy is to ensure that all health care providers, including physicians, nurses, and other health professionals, are aware of the need to address the needs of all patients in a culturally and linguistically appropriate manner.

BACKGROUND TO THE POLICY

Each country has its own culture. The recognition and accommodation of differences in culture is important to ensure that all patients receive the best possible care. Cultural differences may influence the way people think and feel, as well as how they express themselves. Differences in cultural values and beliefs can affect the way people perceive and respond to illness and healthcare.

CMA STATEMENT ON EQUITY AND DIVERSITY IN MEDICINE

What is equity?

Equity means that everyone should have equal opportunity and access to healthcare services. It means providing care that is free from discrimination and ensuring that all patients receive the same level of care, regardless of their race, gender, socioeconomic status, sexual orientation, or other key characteristics.

Why is equity important?

Equity is important because everyone should have access to the healthcare services they need. It means providing care that is free from discrimination and ensuring that all patients receive the same level of care, regardless of their race, gender, socioeconomic status, sexual orientation, or other key characteristics.
