Patient Partnered Care

The Canadian Medical Association (CMA) supports patient-centered, team-based care that puts the patient at the center of health care decision-making. This approach emphasizes the importance of involving patients in all aspects of their care, from diagnosis to treatment planning, to ensure that their needs and preferences are met. The CMA advocates for policies and practices that facilitate collaboration between physicians, nurses, and other health care professionals, to ensure that patients receive the best possible care. The CMA also supports policies that promote the development of patient-centered medical homes, which provide comprehensive, coordinated care to patients in a team-based approach. The CMA encourages health care providers to work closely with patients to help them understand their medical conditions and make informed decisions about their care.
