National Approach to Licensure

The Canadian Medical Association (CMA) is committed to a national approach to licensure for health professionals. This includes the establishment of a national framework for the regulation of health professionals, which would provide a consistent and coordinated approach to licensure across the country. This framework would address the following key areas:

1. Establishment of a national registry for health professionals
2. Development of a national standard for the regulation of health professionals
3. Coordination of the regulation of health professionals across provinces and territories

The CMA believes that a national approach to licensure for health professionals would enhance the quality of care provided to patients, promote public health, and ensure the safety and ethical practice of health professionals.
